Words to the Herds

The '89 Snowboard Season

by Tom Sims

Another winter approaches the Northern Hemisphere loaded with Big Snow Storms.

I'm looking forward to snowboarding at Snow Summit ski area on Thanksgiving or earlier because of their massive snowboarding capabilities. Another reason for my excitement is Summit's new 1/2 pipe that I designed and built during the summer.

½ pipes will soon be built all over the country at your favorite ski resorts. If your local area needs some help in designing their pipe and picking the right location have them give me a call.

Also, more good news with Vail, Steamboat and Snowbird joining the growing list of hot ski areas going all out for boarders!

Equipment has also made some big advances this year with lighter stronger boards "the Rule" if you're going to shred all these new ½ pipes.

Boots and bindings remain the big question this season as the Euros (Europeans) make some advances in plate binding design.

I am still not satisfied with any plate binding yet, because they come loose and you pop out when least expected. Remember—you don't have to have plate bindings just because you ride in hard shell boots. Most plate bindings have not been perfected yet and are a real pain to get in and out of.

Plates appear to be simple but are really complex. Unexpected binding releases and plates coming loose are common. There will undoubtedly be good plate bindings by the 1989-1990 season. But I suggest not jumping into them too quickly—especially if you favor Sorels with ski boot liners.

Some high back bindings work great with hard shell boots in fact supplying safer and better support with added versatility for race, 1/2 pipe, and freestyle.

I personally have been using lace-up mountaineering boots like Lowag and Dachismen. The new Raichle buckle has potential but costs over $300.

Anyway— whatever board setup you choose this winter try and test ride it first before you buy because there's heaps of new stuff and little testing time has gone into them. That's because many new companies have only one thing in mind, "make a profit now while snowboarding's hip". Little do they know—Snowboarding's here to stay—what's the rush!

FUN CTIO NAL SHAPE FUN CTIO NAL CARVE

Gnu comes full force into this season with a new binding to compliment their complete line of high performance boards. This binding has been over two years in development and has already set the slopes on fire during the spring and summer testing. The reinforced high back has an optimum forward lean and features an optional pad. The high back angle offers positive control on heel side turns without restricting lateral flex within the binding for freestyle.

Gnu is still the only binding which has a full tongue to spread the pressure of the lower straps evenly across the arch of the foot and toe. No more pressure points! (To most snowboarders this may sound like a dream come true.) The binding is available with two different tongues which vary in stiffness. This allows the rider to customize the bindings forward flex to fit their needs. It is popular to mix or match the tongues to provide maximum support for high speed front turns or total freedom for contorted freestyle moves.

The Gnu binding has been designed to be customized utilizing various options and features which everyone has been waiting for. These options include high back pads, an upper race strap, canting plates for both forward and side canting, a special high back pad canting kit to increase the high back's forward rake, and two different stiffnesses of tongues.

The high back binding is here to stay in the U.S. because the roots of this sport are firmly planted in freestyle. The Gnu binding also has its roots firmly planted in freestlye with its total freedom and maximum adjustability. The Gnu binding is designed to enhance your style not restrict it.

The Antigravity is a very special board. This design has its roots in our successful Antigravity 156 of last season. This board has proven itself as a very competitive slalom and all-around board for lighter riders. Amy Howat (Mt. Baker Hard-Core) has taken this board to victory after victory. In the World Cup she rides this board in all disciplines: freestyle, bumps, slalom and downhill. The proof of the board's high performance is in her World Cup results and this is quite a statement, both about her ability and her choice of equipment. Amy is currently World Champion in Slalom and Moguls and third in Half Pipe.

We recommend the Antigravity 156 for lighter riders looking for a slalom or cruising board. For the heavier rider the board handles as a freestyle board with a tight edge control for powerful air and tricks. The strength, lightweight, highly tuned flex pattern and well-balanced side-cut and camber create a board unparalleled on the market.

The Kaos was designed to fill the needs of smaller, lighter freestyle oriented riders. This is not a toy board. It has all the features of our larger carving board scaled down for a lighter rider. Already the Kaos has carved out an interesting niche for itself amongst our team riders and board testing team. The lighter riders finally have an easy to control aggressive carving edge control and this translates into more air and confidence in high speed powerful manuevers.

At the World Championship, Gene Higgens rode the Kaos to 2nd place in the Women's Half Pipe. Jeff Davis (approx. 145 lbs.) also took the board into the men's finals finishing 11th in the World. Unlike other dish-shaped freestyle boards this board has tight edge control which offers better speed. The result is more energy for the wall and more air!

AN S.O.H. FEATURE ARTICLE

THIRTY YEARS AGO California surfers began carving the pavement on boards nailed to roller skates. When the waves were low or the water too cold, the surfers rode the asphalt as they did the surf, executing graceful yet daring manuevers. Ability increased quickly, but stopped short at the limits of the equipment, because there was no specialized skateboard equipment. Everything had to be invented so every skate session was research and development. Some of the older surfers had their own small businesses or worked as part of family businesses which they used to launch the skateboard manufacturing industry. Larry Balma was one of a group of older skaters who had his own business; he was a commercial fisherman sometimes going out to sea on runs that lasted 28 days. There were no guarantees of fish, of money or even returning safely; but that prepared him for the risk he assumed in starting truck manufacture. In the end, not only did he prevail, but Tracker made the first real skateboard truck, its design has been copied and modified by all trucks in the industry. Today, all decks are drilled to fit the four hole pattern that Tracker Trucks devised in 1975. For skaters like Balma skate sessions became sessions in the world of finance, advertising, raw materials, law and creative expertise. The guys who come out on top in any session are the ones with the most guts, the guys who push the hardest to get up the highest.

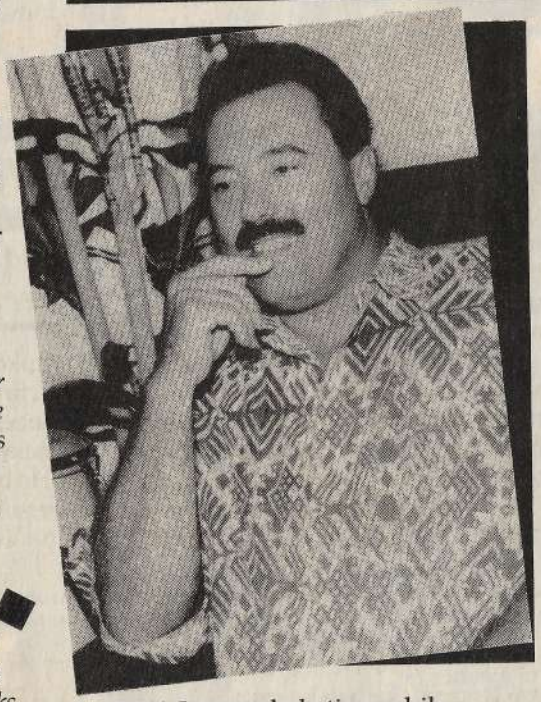
TRACKER LARRY & HIS TRUCKS



LARRY: I started skating while being a surfer in 1960. At that time, we were skating on steel roller skate wheels that had been spread apart on two-by-fours or one-by-eights. That evolved to clay wheels from indoor roller skates which wore out after a couple of hours on asphalt. Then came the first manufactured skateboards around 1964— oak boards with roller skate trucks and clay wheels. I never was involved in competition. For me, skateboarding was a way to have fun when I wasn't in the water surfing. I didn't skate swimming pools then, not even drainage ditches, although there were truck loading ramps. We mostly emulated surfing—downhill. Then I put the skateboard away until 1973, when the Cadillac wheel came out. We went to LaCosta where there was a new housing project with no houses built yet—miles of brand new pavement. We skated surf-style or ski-style down a couple miles of hills, jump in the back of a truck and drive back up to the top. I immediately thought if we had better bearings in these urethane wheels we could really roll. Before, a grain of sand would stop the clay wheels, but the urethanes could roll over gravel and they were quiet. But the bearings were loose, rattled and got dirty. And if the bearings were better, the trucks would have to be wider for stability.

I sat down in my office using prices off bearing catalogues figuring metal for axles and I thought a skateboard would have to cost $30.00; nobody would ever pay that much for a skateboard. So I canned the idea. But in the next year, Bill Baine, a friend, sold 100,000 skateboards at $30.00 a piece. So I took a more serious look and I started work on a truck. I had two partners when I started. Dave Dominy and Gary Dodds. At the time I was a commercial fisherman, and had been a machinist. I grew up with Gary, a pattern- maker by trade, and he knew foundry work. Dave was one of my friends skating with us and working as a carpenter. The plan was I would set the machine shop up and Dave would run it—but the business took off right away and I sold my fishing boats.

In the beginning, I welded together different pieces trying different geometries, trial and error on various boards and wheels. I made clay patterns which were taken by the pattern-maker and applied to what was moldable.

We came out with the first skateboard truck in September, 1975. (Until the Tracker Truck came out, all skateboards were made using roller skate trucks.) Chris Yandall won the Slalom contest that weekend on Tracker Fulltracks, and a new era in skateboard hardware was launched.

CAROL: What made the Tracker Truck a skateboard truck as compared to the roller skate trucks that were used at that time?

LARRY: On roller skates you have four trucks underneath you instead of two. The Tracker Truck was stronger so that two trucks were adequate. Tracker standardized the industry with the half inch diameter pivot pin. The roller skate pivots were very small. The Tracker Truck was more than twice as wide as a roller skate truck. This width took advantage of the skateboard deck leverage and resulted in much better traction and control. The increased leverage of the skateboard deck posed other problems to the tiny roller skate trucks. The axle diameter itself was too small with outdated nuts and lock washers. We used 5/16" diameter chrom moly axles for strength and aircraft type nylon insert locknuts. The roller skate kingpin was a bolt that screwed in through the grommets using another nut to lock it. The increased leverage would strip these out of the bases. Tracker introduced the fixed kingpin studbolt and a simple aircraft locknut adjustment.

All of the innovations that made the Tracker Truck a skateboard truck are standard items on every skateboard truck made today.

Another one of Tracker's innovations was the standardization of the four-bolt mounting hole configuration. At the time, there were four different types of mounting bolt patterns, and none of the boards came pre-drilled because the board-makers didn't know what truck would eventually be attached. There were four-hole patterns that were close together, three-hole patterns and then I came out with the four-hole pattern that standardized the industry.

All of the innovations that made the Tracker Truck a skateboard truck are standard items on every skateboard truck made today.

CAROL: Why are trucks called "trucks"?

LARRY: A truck is a carriage assembly that holds wheels. Trucks are attached to some sort of platform for transporting loads. Like a hand truck that your neighbor uses to haul the trash out to the curb. Or a lift truck that is pushed around the warehouse. Or on a train car.

My dad worked for the railroad all his life which is how I got the name "Tracker". On a train car you have two trucks on either end of the car, the trucks have wheels and since they track each other I decided its similar to a skateboard - a truck on each end, the rear wheels track the front wheels: Tracker Trucks.

CAROL: So the wheels bolt to the trucks and the trucks bolt to. . . .

LARRY: Yes, unlike your neighbor, the platform we bolt our trucks to is a skate deck and we ride it into the street and trash the curb.

CAROL: Who designs Tracker Trucks now?

LARRY: I do, although I take a lot of input from everybody. Ideal theories don't always work in practical application. A manufacturer must take the time to fabricate different parts and test them with different skaters. Some skaters are light on their feet and other skaters are harsh on their equipment.

I remember an instance early on where Dave MacIntyre, who was then working for G&S, showed me a new truck built by High Performance Grinding, a grinding company not otherwise into skateboard industry. He repeated to me all the sales hype the company had told him and I replied that the truck was a bad design, it had a weak spot and, in fact, I told him I could break it with my bare hands. MacIntyre called up HPG on the telephone and told them that Larry from Tracker said their truck was weak, etc., and they replied that it wasn't true and I was just scared they'd take over the industry. As a result, they brought the truck out for me to break. Now, I didn't know I could really break the truck with my bare hands, I only knew where it was weak; still I told the guys to bolt it to a board so I would at least have some leverage. MacIntyre was leaning back in his chair as I stood on the board, reached down, Yes, unlike your neighbor, the platform we bolt our trucks to is a skate deck and we ride it into the street and trash the curb.

yanked the truck and busted the casting in two. As I tossed the pieces on his desk, MacIntyre fell backwards yelling in the phone "He broke it!, He broke it with his bare hands! We can't sell this" to the guys at HPG. They had to reinforce it with a metal plate. But the real error was in not testing the fabrications thoroughly using different types of skaters.

CAROL: Why haven't you designed separate trucks for ramp and street riding?

LARRY: There aren't really specific truck designs that work better for street or vert. The size and strength and the style of particular skaters will have more influence on which truck he chooses to ride than the surface he skates on. With the exception of a truck designed only for high speed downhills, any skateboard truck can be ridden effectively on street or vert. In the 1970's, there were some oddly different designs of skateboard trucks. I experimented with quite a few different designs, but the no-frills design of our double action fixed kingpin truck is still the best solution today. If you look at the truck designs, most of them look surprisingly similar to the original Tracker Truck of 1975.

To get back to the question, the skater needs to choose the truck that "feels" the best. This is not an easy thing to decide. Any minor change to a skateboard set-up may dramatically change the way the trucks "feel". The same thickness of spacepad on two types of trucks will probably result in the axle of one having more deck clearance. More deck clearance equals more turning angle. Irrespective of any geometry difference. A smaller wheel diameter will also result in more deck clearance. More deck clearance equals more turning angle. Different sets of trucks mounted on the same type of deck may result in different wheel bases. Shorter wheelbase equals smaller turning radius irrespective of any geometry difference in the trucks and the list goes on and on.

Our philosophy at Tracker is to build a system of products and components that can be mixed, matched, and interchanged so that every skater can fine tune his own skate to his personal style of riding.

The fulltrack, the extrack, and the sixtrack as well as another truck we are working on now are all slightly different geometries. Our philosophy at Tracker is to build a system of products and components that can be mixed, matched, and interchanged so that every skater can fine tune his own skate to his personal style of riding.

CAROL: How are Tracker Trucks made?

LARRY: The aluminum parts are actually cast in a sand mold. This is an ancient art. Sand casting goes back a few thousand years with lead, bronze, and other metals. It may seem archaic making trucks this way now, but there are certain alloys of metal that are molded certain ways. The prime, top grade aluminum we use is very strong, but also elastic, so that when the trucks hit, there is give and they don't snap. There are other types of molding where the metal is squeezed into a steel die cavity, (die casting), but the types of metal you have to use in the process are very heavy and are not as strong.

Also, there are gasses present in the molten metal that may not escape the steel die and remain inside the casting as bubbles of air just waiting to "break along the dotted line" on your next gnarly landing. A die cast part is much easier, faster, and cheaper to produce, but at Tracker we take no shortcuts on time or money, we just build gnarly skate trucks.

CAROL: How do you make a sand mold?

LARRY: First, we make a master pattern, then we make a matchplate off of that, then a mold in sand from the matchplate. There is shrinkage in each of these steps. When a quick bucks manufacturer copies a part by making a master pattern off someone else's finished part, the copy will be a bit smaller than the original he copied.

Foundry work is really a dirty job. I ran a foundry for a while out of necessity when we first started. The trick of the matchplate is to crowd on as many parts as possible. A guy puts a powder on the matchplate, shovels sand over it, then a machine squeezes the sand tightly against the matchplate. The powder is going to allow the sand to release from the surface of the matchplate. Then he turns the whole thing over and does the other side the same way so you end up with a sand mold. One guy can do 80 to 100 molds per day, setting up the molds while he is melting the metal.

The first sand that goes in contact with the plate is screened so there is a nice finish. There are all different types of sand used—it has to be a certain consistency so it sticks together and holds the shape of the matchplate impression.

An air hose attaches the edge of the matchplate with a vibrator so that the matchplate is vibrated at high intensity, loosening the sand from the matchplate.

Finally, you remove the matchplate from between the two blocks of sand, now you have one half of the impression of a skate truck in each block of sand. The two blocks of sand are put together very gently and now you have a sand mold ready to fill with molten metal. At this point, if any part of the sand breaks loose, your parts will be worthless.

At Tracker we take no shortcuts on time or money, we just build gnarly skate trucks.

CAROL: You mentioned that there were different types of aluminum.

LARRY: Aluminum is one of the basic elements present on this earth. The aluminum that we see used in castings, sheets, tubing, or bars are all alloys of aluminum. An alloy is a mixture of metals that have been combined to result in a metal alloy that is either stronger or tougher or harder or more corrosion resistant than the element by itself.

CAROL: What type of aluminum do you use in Trackers?

LARRY: We use the prime, top grade aluminum all the time. Other manufacturing processes use secondary metal, which is quite a bit cheaper, but it has impurities that can cause bubbling and other things. You can see the inferiority of the metal when you look at the finished part—the bubbles and pocks. Die casting processes, for instance, need a heavier metal with zinc in it because the metal has to flow easily and zinc is slippery. The zinc doesn't have strength, but it has lots of weight. You can make lots more parts less expensively and quicker because you don't have the handwork of the sand molds.

The aluminum alloy that we use in Tracker Trucks is Prime A-356-T6. It is aluminum combined with magnesium and silicon to provide strength, toughness, and lightness. "Prime" means that it is an alloy made from virgin metals that have been extracted from ores mined out of the earth. An alloy that is not prime means that it has been reconstructed by melting down beer cans, etc. Of course prime material is more expensive, but it is also solid and pure. A-356 is the finest grade of the 356 alloy. There are hundreds of alloys. T6 is the type of heat treatment that the casting has undergone.

CAROL: So you buy the aluminum in. . . . .

LARRY: Ingots. Think of gold bars. These are aluminum bars and they are beautiful. You place these bars into a large crucible with a huge gas flame underneath it and melt the alloy. Again, this is a critical process if the metal bubbles or burns, you are loosing magnesium and other elements and your alloy is not what you started with. The alloy must be heated to over 1300 degrees F, hot enough that it will flow through the mold, but not so hot that the alloy will change or that it makes bubbles inside the part. We carefully inspect every casting and reject any part that isn't perfect.

Now, you pour the molten aluminum alloy into the sand mold and wait for it to cool.

Next, the sand mold is broken away from the casting. What is left is a piece of aluminum that looks like part of a model kit with all the individual parts attached to a center runner bar. These parts are now sawed away from the runner and are ready for the heat treat process.

CAROL: What happens to the sand?

LARRY: The sand is returned to the pile, re-mixed and used again. Sand casting seems bizarre because every time you make a mold in sand you have to destroy it to get the parts out.

CAROL: Would you describe the heat treat process?

LARRY: A big barrel, holding about 1500 pounds of parts goes into an oven, is heated to over 1,000 degrees F for hours, then dumped into a quenching solution to harden, and finally returned to an oven at a lower temperature for a certain amount of time to age. The crystalline structure of the metal is re-formed by this process. The parts, as cast, are soft and this heat treating operation hardens them. When the parts are heat treated, the metal turns from shiny to a dull finish; and from here we start grinding, polishing in the tumblers and painting.

CAROL: What about axles?

LARRY: The axle material is a high molybdenum content steel. The type of material that is used, for instance, for the shafts in a transmission of a car or truck, or for axle shafts or wheel spindles and other high strength situations. When I started building trucks, nobody used material like this in their axles, maybe only Snyder Roller Skates. Of course, there weren't skateboard trucks made at that time, but even the trucks that came after we started the business used different types of steels that were case hardened and snapped as the truck designs became wider. Now I imagine most truck manufacturers use some sort of chromoly axle.

Sand casting seems bizarre because every time you make a mold in sand you have to destroy it to get the parts out.

The steel has to be ordered from the mill made to specification. It can be ordered as rods or as coils. The coiled metal is cheaper, but being made into a coil, the metal doesn't necessarily want to stay straight, so we don't use it, although other manufacturers do. Our threads are made with rollers as opposed to cutting the threads in, because the rollers press the metal, making it more dense. Of course cutting the grooves into the axle is faster and cheaper, but not nearly as strong.

Axles have to be machined when they are soft, so they are heat treated after machining. This is a totally different heat treater than the aluminum heat treater, another process altogether. Our chromoly axles are heated in ovens, quenched in oil, and heated in ovens again and finally cooled. The heat treat or temper goes all the way through the part. By contract, the case hardening process results in a part that might break because the outside shell of the axle is hardened but the inside remains soft. Great care must also be taken during this heat process so that the axles do not get warped. Our axles are more expensive to make, but they are straight and hard all the way through.

All the time these parts are in the heat treat ovens, time clock graphs are running. So you can always tell if the heat varies for any length of time, you know the parts weren't heat treated properly and you are going to have to anneal and redo it. Every step is certified, from the original purchase verifying the various percentages of metals in the alloy to the heat treaters. This is all based on the aircraft industry, because they deal with government specifications on aircraft projects. I use the same government specifications normally used for making airplanes. Nobody tells me to do that but it's the responsible way. Certifying each step costs more, but I know that nobody took any shortcuts—I have the best possible product because I have my suppliers' signatures, backed by their reputations.

CAROL: How are plastic parts manufactured?

LARRY: Again, the plastics are either cast in molds or injected into die molds. There are thousands of different types of plastics. Any quality skateboard wheel on the market today is made by the casting process. The urethane compound will vary from manufacturer to manufacturer, but they are all cast. The cheap wheels may be injection molded, but the type of urethane that can be injected won't have the quality, durability, hardness, and rebound that is necessary.

I use the same government specifications normally used for making airplanes.

When you talk about rails, some are cast, some are injected, some are extruded and some are cut out of sheets. They are all slightly different and all seem to work, and there is no clear cut difference.

Injection molds are extremely expensive. The best way to work with nylons is by injection molding. There is a lot of research and development that goes into engineering a part out of nylon. The hard part is figuring out the configuration that works and making a sample mold for testing various materials. I mentioned shrinkage when we spoke about aluminum, well in plastics, every type has a different amount of shrinkage. Once I experiment with a material in a sample mold and find the one that works best, then I have to rework the specifications of the mold to allow for the shrinkage specific to that material. Then finally, build the production mold. This is a long process.

I have two suppliers for everything so I always have a backup. Rather than to buy all the equipment for making everything I need, I rely on other people who specialize, who can afford the best machinery in their particular fields. Instead of the overhead in machinery, I put the money into research and development. I have the molds made to my specifications, then take them to a shop, tell them what material to use, and let them make the parts.

The nylon we use comes in the form of pellets. These pellets are put into a machine, warmed until the nylon flows together, then injected with 250 tons of pressure. This is why the molds are made of hardened, tool steel and are extremely expensive. Complexity, such as that for our nylon baseplate mold adds to the expense.

CAROL: How did you start making riser pads?

LARRY: When I first started, we were making them out of wood. Now, of course, they are injection molded for strength and lightness. Some trucks are made with thicker baseplates or taller axles, but that set-up doesn't allow the skater the option of mounting the truck closer to the board for a lower center of gravity.

For different types of skating, a skater needs that flexibility. Freestyle and slalom requires the least amount of riser. A street skater might want to use a 5/16" pad and have his trucks close to the board. With the same deck and wheel combination, a vertical skater might want to use a thicker pad for more carving ability.

CAROL: What is the purpose of rubber shock pads?

LARRY: The rubber shock pads act as gaskets. Just as gaskets take up slop between parts in an engine, so the shock pads take up slop that develops as the bolts work into the deck and griptape with usage.

CAROL: What is the purpose of the wedge pads?

LARRY: The wedge pads alter the geometry of the truck with a steeper or less steep angle, depending on how the pads are mounted. The degree of wedge, especially in our wedge pads, makes a radical difference in how the truck moves. If more wedge is put in the front there is more turn in the front, if more wedge is put in the back, there is more turn there. You can put the pads equally on both trucks or in unequal configurations which will change the location of the steering center, front to rear. So the skater can ride either further forward and do his turns, or further back and do his turns. The wedge pads are a fine tuning device - we used them in slalom racing adjusting for different courses by trial and error.

A street skater may want to wedge his street deck more than his vertical deck. The best way to really feel the difference is by setting up boards with different configurations of wedge pads, using same wheels and wheel base. When a skater steps from one board to the other, the difference is very obvious.

CAROL: Do you think the cell block III helps prevent decks from breaking in front of the rear truck?

LARRY: There are a lot of factors in that type of break, but I think it helps, especially on decks made of weak wood.

CAROL: Why are Tracker grommets sold in a package of two inners or two outers, so that if you want new grommets for one truck you have to buy two packages?

LARRY: We put the inners and outers in separate packages so that skaters can mix the hardnesses, use differing hardnesses on the bottom and top for different types of riding. Grommets are a replacement item that should be changed quite often because they wear out, depending on the riding. The pivot bushings should be changed even more often than the grommets. I would like to see skaters experiment more with grommets and tightening. Set up the board, give it a few good days' riding workout, then change over to a different setup and try that same riding workout. Some skaters buy their board, remove the grommets immediately and change over to a configuration that works for Joe down the street. But Joe might weigh a hundred pounds more, and now the new board the skater just bought won't even turn because he isn't heavy enough to compress the hard grommets.

I encourage experimentation.

Grommets are a replacement item that should be changed quite often because they wear out.

Either a skater buys a board because a friend suggests the setup or because another rider uses a particular setup. If he chooses another rider's setup, preferably one who fits his own style of riding, then he has a combination of truck, deck, and wheel base that is already tried and known to work. At that point, the skater can experiment with different hardnesses of grommets and different hardnesses of wheels. The grommet harnesses are going to apply to the person's style of riding and the size and weight of the rider. The different hardnesses of wheels relate to the surface or type of riding.

I encourage skaters to try each other's board setups and feel what each one does. If a skater does only a few ollies and some kickturns, he doesn't know what the board is doing underneath him: he's just using a platform and forcing it through the air, not feeling what the turning is. Of course, the scientific method is to setup several boards with only one variable to feel the many differences that one aspect makes. Whenever we do tests on trucks, we take a dozen of the same skateboards, we set them all up with exactly the same wheel base, exactly the same height off the ground which may mean different size space pads on every board or drilling the holes different to duplicate the same wheel base. But then all the setups are based on the same wheel base, same shape, same ride height and we can experiment with the different actions the trucks provide. We can experiment with different grommet combinations and feel the difference jumping from one board to the next. I encourage everybody to have more than one skateboard and change parts between them and feel what is happening. I think that makes for better skaters, skaters who are in tune with equipment and who can vary their equipment to really make it work. For instance, the difference between two identical setups with only the wedge pads variable is dramatic.

I encourage everybody to have more than one skateboard and change parts between them and feel what is happening.

Tracker has a skate team of fifty professional skaters and even more amateurs worldwide. Professional skaters change one thing in the setup at a time, one grommet out of four grommets changed, then try tightening it all different ways and they ride all day long on the same terrain so they can feel the difference each alteration makes.

CAROL: Tracker's hardest type grommet, clear is only available for the outer grommet, why?

LARRY: The inner grommet needs that spring, the rebound. A solid outer grommet creates a single action truck, so now there's only spring because rebound is in that inner grommet. If both grommets were solid, the truck would not turn at all. Kick turns, ollies, and slides are fun, but carving turns is an important part of skating. If both grommets were solid, something would end up breaking. One thing I have noticed is the better a skater rides, the looser he rides his trucks. Remember, loose trucks for Joe down the street may be way too tight for you, because he has more weight and leverage.

CAROL: Is Tracker mounting hardware a type that bites into the deck wood as do Thunderbolts and Ratnuts?

LARRY: No. Tracker mounting hardware is a very tough, grade 8 material. The only complaint I've heard is that skaters loose the wrench, but the Allen Head socket is superior for tightening. Also, Tracker hardware instructions tell skaters to use washers, especially between the nut and the nylon baseplate, to get the right torque on the nuts and bolts. The new Tracker skate wrench also has an Allen wrench.

CAROL: Why does Tracker name its trucks 6-Track, X-Track, Mid-Track, etc. rather than using numbers that denote size, such as G&S 150's, Gullwing 9", or Indy 169's?

LARRY: Our first truck was called the Tracker Fultrack. Since it was more than twice as wide as the trucks of the time, it really was a full tracking width. Next, we made narrower trucks; the Haftrack, and the Midtrack. Then, we came out with the wider trucks; the Extrack, and the Sxtrack. The Sxtrack has become known as the Six-Track. Indy 149's, 159's, 169's relate to the width of the axle casting in millimeters. Actually, they measure 145 mm, 151mm, and 164mm. Trucks with nine inch axles could still have different widths of castings. The width of the casting is how far the wheels will be spaced apart. Our axle is long enough to adjust the spacing of the wheels using washers. The actual setup has variables. for example, are the wheels centerset bearing or flat back? This factor makes more of a difference in width than the truck itself. "Nine inch truck" is ambiguous—that's just how far the axle goes out to the ends.

CAROL: How is Transworld Skateboarding Magazine affiliated with Tracker?

LARRY: My Partner Peggy Cozens and I started Transworld Skateboarding Magazine. It is a totally separate company. We were very involved in the beginning, but now it is run by its own group of people, producing a magazine based on the sport.
At the time we started Transworld, Skateboarder Magazine, had been killed by its owners, Surfer Magazine and Skateboarding media coverage was nil. Thrasher was a hardcore newsprint publication printed in black and white; and we wanted to show off the dynamic side of skateboarding with glossy color publication. Plus, it gave the dealers a catalog in which to show their products. All along, skaters were sending xeroxed magazines around the country to share the information, so we brought some of these skaters in to work on the magazine. Being glossy and in color, it could be carried on newsstands worldwide, adding the media coverage to help the sport go farther.

CAROL: Is the magazine influenced or biased by your partnership in it?

LARRY: I am 100% owner of Tracker, and I have a percentage ownership in the magazine, but I'm not that much involved with running of the magazine anymore. We have a staff on the magazine made up of business people and skaters both. The skaters are sponsored by truck companies other than Tracker. I don't own it 100%, and I don't think its a biased magazine.

CAROL: How did Transworld Snowboarding Magazine develop?

LARRY: I've been fooling around with snowboards even in the 70's and was always interested in the sport. The winter issues of our skate magazine included snowboarding because the skaters like it an it relates closely with skateboarding. Last year there were enough sales in snowboarding, enough ski areas allowing snowboarding to indicate that the time was right to try a snowboarding magazine. We printed three issues last year and it was a big success. This year we will print five issues.

CAROL: How has the face of skating changed?

LARRY: I have watched skating evolve from the stone age to the radical explosive skating we have today. Skaters are uninhibited. Skating will get even more bio as each generation of skaters pushes the limits farther and beyond. I don't know how many skaters will skate forever. Young kids skate as a form of transportation and the smaller skater doesn't have as far down to fall, younger heals faster. When a guy reaches sixteen, girlfriends and cars cut into his interest in skating. Guys who really enjoy it stay on, but when they start working, they skate less; that's what happened to me. I skated the shopping centers at night, but with a daughter and responsibilities, I skated less and less.

I have watched skating evolve from the stone age to the radical explosive skating we have today. Skaters are uninhibited.

Some skaters get into competition and some get good enough to become sponsored and even become pros. These pros get paid to skate! What a great way to earn a living, but like anything else, it takes hard work. New kids are becoming skaters everyday and the hottest pro ever probably hasn't even seen a skateboard yet!

Skating is becoming more and more accepted as a sport over time. In the sixties, not many people had seen a skateboard and, although quite a few people were skating, the concept didn't spread far and it was still considered a toy item. In the seventies, skating became widespread; but there was an attitude that skating was no good and should be outlawed. Nevertheless, the seventies was a learning period for equipment manufacturers; the size and type of wheels, decks, trucks, and safety gear, plus an evolution of how to do tricks and survive. Now in the eighties skating is more widespread, it has become a life-style sport. There is clothing made especially for skating. There is music, there are skaters in the background of TV commercials.

When families go shopping for skateboards, mom may not be in favor of it, but dad skated when he was a kid and knows it is OK. Even though skating may be outlawed in some places, there are city council meetings, where the council members have themselves skated or their kids do. Someday, the skateboard will have the same acceptance as a bicycle. Tracker will continue to provide skate gear and Transworld Skateboarding Magazine will continue to bring you the photos.

HENRY "BAD H" HESTER & G&S TRUCKS

IN THE EARLY years of skateboarding, skaters had to design the equipment for the type of skating they wanted. Today the equipment is already available, but the skater has to choose what is best for him. The best method of choosing equipment is the same method that early skaters used to design equipment—skate! Henry Hester skated pro in the seventies and now works for G&S. In the following comments he offers a few ideas skaters might use when testing, using and choosing equipment.

CAROL: Your trucks have a lot of welding on them, don't they?

HENRY: There are a number of welds. We took off one weld along the back because we found we didn't need it. Removing that weld enabled us to make more trucks and attract more welders.

CAROL: Why did G&S choose this design for their trucks?

HENRY: Terry Meyers, the manufacturer, came to G&S with a truck design that originally did not turn at all. The first one he brought in was horrible. Chris Miller looked at it and busted up. Despite that, we saw that with the proper geometry it could be a good truck, a lightweight, strong design. All truck companies' first design doesn't turn. Now, ten months into production, we have a strong truck with a breakage rate of 1-2%. Of course, we had the benefit of the whole truck industry's experience and mistakes over several years, so we knew what to avoid.

At first, skaters resisted the idea of G&S trucks, maybe because of the dominance of Indy and Tracker. But Larry Gordon was the guy who said, "I think we can do it. We have something that no one else has: a chromolly hangar that grinds all day long, a metal-reinforced baseplate, a hollow axle and a hollow kingpin." The idea behind the chromolly is that the trucks grind faster, the metal lasts longer and its lightweight. Chromolly is familiar to the BMX set because its also the tubing used in making bicycle frames. The axle, also chromolly, is hollow—the theory being that more surface area provides more strength. Hangar, axle, kingpin and all welds are chromolly steel. We insert metal, shaped similar to a U-channel with holes in it, into the baseplate when its being poured to strengthen the corners. Of course, all trucks break; the trick is to make one that breaks less than others.

CAROL: How has G&S improved the trucks?

HENRY: The kingpin is no longer hollow. That was a trade-off for the fancy colors we're introducing. We've increased the heat tempering from 25 to 49 on the Rockwell Scale which is almost the top of the scale. The metal edge on a snowboard or ski, for instance is 50 on the Rockwell Scale. If our trucks were tempered that high, they would become brittle and crack, so there is a fine line there.

CAROL: Are G&S trucks designed primarily for ramp or street riding?

HENRY: Personally, I really don't see much difference between skating a ramp or street. I know that on a ramp you typically want a truck that has a slower turning radius so that it doesn't get too wiggly when you're going across the flat bottom. Our truck has a tight turning radius, but guys like them on ramps, they grind great on the coping. They're a wiry truck going across the flat bottom so you have to tighten down pretty good or use harder grommets. A G&S truck won't ride like a Tracker where it doesn't turn quite as quickly. Ours is closer to an Indy or a Venture which is good for the street. These trucks TURN. When you angle the board on a G&S truck the board will go around in a circle as opposed to keep going straight. And that's how we think it should be.

CAROL: Why are so many skaters tightening their trucks to the breaking point, plus using the hardest grommets available?

HENRY: They have their reasons. They want to get up on a curb, do slappies, 50/50 grinds on a curb, without the truck turning or folding under on them. Those skaters basically want to do ollies, real straight ahead without having the board lob off one side or the other.

But there are times when a skater wants to ride loose, too. We have a guy on our team that rides for Motobuilt, Randy Burke, who rides his trucks so loose that you can take the board, skate it, and it feels as though there aren't any grommets at all. His board is extremely loose and, for me, its hard to ride, hard to even stand up on, but he rips on it. There a number of schools of thought. I think the ultimate is always have a wrench along and adjust the truck to what the skating calls for. Tighten for ramps, loosen for street. Tighten too much, though, and the geometry of the truck changes; the kingpin or the part that goes around the cushion can break.

G&S offers soft cushions with our trucks. We sell Supercush, the urethane cushion made by Independent, on our trucks because they're the best cushions made. Cushions are really important to how a truck rides. Supercush has good rebound, that is, the hangar returns to its original position after turning. G&S experimented with different urethanes for cushions but none were as good as Supercush, so even though they cost more for us to put on our trucks, the performance is worth the price.

Manufacturers put so much work into designing good riding, nice turning trucks, that for them to see skaters tighten their trucks down and put in hard cushions so the trucks don't turn is heartbreaking. I think all the manufacturers supply their trucks with looser grommets, not because they're cheaper or easier but because they want skaters to learn to turn.

CAROL: Were the guys you skated with in the old days meticulous about equipment?

HENRY: No question about it. We were technicians. I had three or four sets of bearings all lined up with different kinds of oils and when we raced slaloms, we had ten sets of wheels, all different durometers, compounds and hardness. I was one of the first guys to ride Tracker trucks, then I switched to Indys.
Do you know where Indy got its name?

CAROL: No.

HENRY: Before Indy there were trucks called "Strokers" which were rack and pinion steering like you see on the old skate cars. They had a metallic feel and they did turn, but not very well. In the slalom world we were experimenting with trucks that had independent suspension, like a Volkswagon torsion bar suspension; they had an arm inside the axle that moved up and down inside the truck providing independent steering to the truck. That's where the name "Indy" came from—independent suspension trucks. In fact, real decal buffs can still find the stickers that say "Independent Suspension Trucks". I still have a set of these trucks, they still work and I'd still ride that truck on the back of my slalom board today.

I was in on the first Indys, the first Trackers, and had experience in trying a lot of prototype trucks, especially riding slalom, because slalom riding was the measure of a truck's quality. Now slalom has nothing to do with anything.

CAROL: How important a factor is the weight of a truck?

HENRY: Weight's not crucial. To me, the most important thing is how it rides, how it turns, how it grinds. Skaters ride their friends' boards to find out what they like before they buy.

Indys, G&S, Ventures and Thunder are similar in turning geometry. Trackers and Gullwing, with the exception of the Phoenix which is a tight-turning truck, are in another family.

CAROL: What about the Phoenix, does it work?

HENRY: I don't like the way it rides on the street and mini ramps where I ride. I'm no pro skater so maybe I'm not the best judge, but, to me, it feels like its floating. For other skaters it may be the best truck in the world, they may like the little dip in there so they can do 50/50 grinds and so on.

CAROL: What decks are G&S trucks designed to fit?

HENRY: All trucks fit all decks. But what you're really asking is "What is the relationship between the deck and the truck?" These days all

SKATES ON HAIGHT Mail Order Policies:

Some of the customers that call for the first time get a false impression of what we are all about. Usually, this is because they call the 800 lines for information instead of using the (415) 431-5054 number. Briefly, these are some answers to the most asked questions:

1) We can only order what is actually in stock at this time. The computer has us on real time, so it is first come, first served. We cannot "hold" any item, for anyone. When you order it one the phone, you will find out instantly if it is available and if it is, it will have been reserved just for you, even if it is the last one! We cannot make a backorder and special orders are not possible.

2) We cannot guarantee color on tee-shirts, sweatshirts, sweatpants and a few other items. We can take a color request at the end of an order, and if that color is available, we will gladly give it to you. Your order taker is at a computer facility and has no access to the color of the merchandise. We DO guarantee style and size.

On decks, we describe the deck by the general color it is painted or stained. Even if you call the Information Line and they look a deck in a given color and tell you what the design looks like and the colors of it, WE WILL NOT GUARANTEE COLOR OF THE DESIGN!! That deck may be sold soon after your call and the next one on the stack in the same color may have a different color design. This DOES happen.

The manufacturers of decks and clothing do not allow us to order by color! We never know what colors we will have until the shipment arrives, hence cannot honestly tell you we will ever have a given color in a style ever again! Sometimes all the decks will be red, or the medium shirts pink and all the large blue.

3) FIT: the customer is responsible for fit. We realize it is difficult to order by phone, but we cannot fit you from our end. The Information Line staff will be glad to help you all they can, but ultimately the responsibility is on the customer to know what is ordered.

4) Your order taker will read your order back to you. Please make any corrections at this time, because if what you receive is what was ordered, you will be responsible for all the shipping to exchange it, or a 20% restocking fee for refunds, as well as the shipping.

5) ERRORS. Our system has improved to the point where our error percentage is far below 1% at this time. However, we do make mistakes. If you receive the wrong item, call Dept. 10 at (415) 431-5054. Generally, we will have to wait until we have received the incorrect item from you before we can ship out, at our expense, the correct item. Please include a copy of your Invoice and write on it clearly what was wrong and what you want us to do. We cannot reimburse you for your phone call nor your shipping expense back to us.

6) All returned items must be in NEW condition. If you skate your deck, wash your shirt, wear your shoes outside, etc. they are yours to keep.

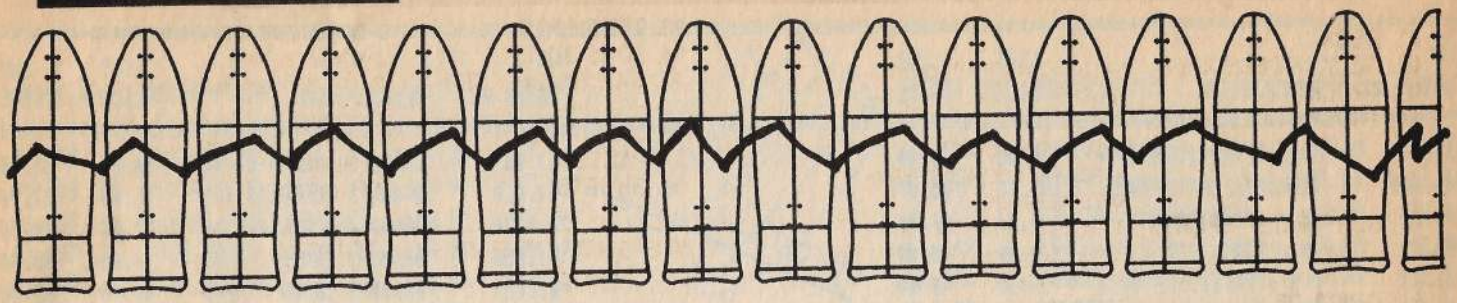
7) Broken decks are returnable directly to the manufacturer usually. See the separate section for details.

Most other products have some warranty by the manufacturer. We will replace any item that the manufacturer will cover. The decision of the manufacturer is final.

8) DELIVERY TIME. Your order taker will give you an estimated time of delivery. This is a guess and courtesy, not in any way a guarantee! Almost all orders are shipped the same day the order is taken, but we cannot be responsible for any delays, nor for any package arriving early. A package may not be traced until the day after the last estimated day of delivery given by your order taker.

9) Out-of-Stock. Rarely, when we go to fill an order, the last of an item is not suitable for sale. We make every effort to maintain an accurate inventory, however, we have never been able to shut down completely for a week to count everything. You will be contacted should we not have some item we thought we did. We are sorry for any delays so incurred, but cannot be responsible for any problems such a delay might cause.

BROKEN DECKS



All decks break. Almost all breaks are jump breaks and not covered by warranty.

Before returning a broken deck you must telephone the manufacturer. Most deck manufacturers want all broken decks returned to them directly—see the telephone list below.

When returning a broken board, the skater must pay for the shipping. If you send it to us, include $4 shipping for us to forward it to the manufacturer. Boards will be broken in half to determine if it is a manufacturing defect, and if you wish the pieces returned to you, enclose another $4.

GRIPTAPE AND STICKERS, NOR ANYTHING ELSE ATTACHED TO THE DECK ARE NOT COVERED BY WARRANTY AND ARE NOT REPLACEABLE!

If you wish to call us, use: (415) 431-5054, and ask for Department 10. NO customer service can be done on the 800 lines! The 800 Lines are for placing an order ONLY.

You must:

1) have your Invoice;
2) have had the deck 30 days or less;
3) have NO impact damage;
4) have no modification of the deck (as in shaving the tail);
5) see your Manufacturer for specifics or other WARRANTY voiding problems. (E.g. wood screws void Santa Cruz.)
6) Show this to your Parents before calling us.

Describe your problem accurately and truthfully when you call us or the manufacturer. What you say on the phone is not important; the condition of the deck when viewed is all that counts. After 12 years of selling skateboards, we can read the marks on a board and tell EXACTLY how it was skated.

If your deck is broken on the Bolt Line across the back truck, you have virtually no chance of a replacement. That is always a jump break even if the actual move made when the deck cracked was NOT the jump that caused the break. Usually earlier in the day, you made a move and thought, "Boy, I'm lucky that didn't break!"—it did; it just did not show the crack.

We keep available less expensive decks for purchase when a skater has broken a deck, can't afford a replacement, but wants to skate.

Boards

Here s ar example of three of our Pro Models. They are all available with the "New Concave" which includes the nose kick (see Nose Kick: previous page), the heavy tri-concave and the G&S V-Tail. The boards shown are 28" minis. The boards shown are mounted with G&S 150 Trucks and 58mm Bam Bams. Perfect for the youth of America. The 50/50 color blends are out on all Models including the Blender, Ruff, Webster Fillion's new board, the Guerrero and Tocco.

Tony Simotes

Tony is on our team and lives in Clearwater, FL. He rips. If you're ever cruising throug Clearwater call Tony and he'll show you around. Ha Ha!

G&S Trucks

Our trucks have evolved rapidly over this first year. The Chromolly steel has been increased in heat tempering to a blistering 49 on the Rockwell Scale. This gives us a much stronger truck while keeping the metal from being too brittle. T-6 Aluminum baseplates are now available but most of our Pros still use the stock Nylon. Note that the kingpins are now solid - the weight savings were not worth the hassle of drilling.

Bam Bam Wheels

Bam Bam wheels come in three durometers, 90, 95 and 97. They are also available in two sizes including 58mm for street and 62mm for ramps and street. Remember, in 1988 you are not allowed to use 58mm wheels on wood or metal surfac Right! They are also availab in a number of graphic colors including black and white.

Trucks

G&S Trucks have a very tight turning radius excellent for street or ramp. Available in two sizes: 150cm and 158cm (the 170 is really 158.2cm. We will call it the 158 from now on. OK? The lemon/lime truck shown here will be out in September 88 . They are also available in all black and black/white combos.

the decks are so much the same, but one new interesting innovation is nose rocker, not nose concave, but lengthwise rocker. This rocker changes the turning angle of the trucks and creates a slower turning truck. You may see this design in the new Powell board, the new Skull Skates, the Life's A Beach Jeff Phillips board. Although this nose rocker changes the way the truck rides , the skater is accustomed to it in about ten minutes. With the trucks angles out a little bit on these new decks, the feel is like the Rad pad in the seventies, or using Tracker wedge pads.

CAROL: How important are riser pads?

HENRY: The riser pads are important to me in that the more riser pads, the farther the truck is from the board and the more leverage you have for the truck. This changes the turning radius. Less riser pads yield a slower reaction from the board, plus more wheel rub. The theory behind the Gullwing baseplate is that you don't even have to use riser pads. But then you don't have the option to ride the truck close to the board. A lot of guys who ride Thunders don't use riser pads—the reason: Thunders ride really well when they're low to the board. But you've got to ride them tight, because if the trucks are loose, they'll be rubbing on the board. A good truck would be one that rides close to the ground, but wouldn't rub on the wheels. And there's a case for the smaller wheels as opposed to the much larger wheels.

CAROL: What's the purpose of the smaller wheels?

HENRY: All the different types of equipment change geometry. Everytime you make something bigger, it changes the way the board turns a little bit. Bigger wheels make for a board with a longer turn; smaller wheels for a tighter turn. And that's all personal preference. A set of Thunder trucks or G&S trucks, without riser pads would mean wheel rub. I think the best setup is using any type of wheel with two thin risers.

CAROL: Why are the large wheels popular?

HENRY: They roll fast. They're a good ramp wheel because they go so fast and keep your speed up to get air. But for lip tricks and for doing tricks on the street, the big wheels are not my choice. I like the way a smaller wheel rides better.

COMMENTARY

In the beginning skaters had to manufacture their own equipment because businessmen outside the sport did not have the emotional commitment, the love for skating, to take the risks for what might have proven to be small monetary rewards. Men like Larry Balma, Tom Sims, Henry Hester and others developed an entire industry on their own sport. Their primary interest stemmed from their desire to build equipment that could help them perfect the type of skating they felt was possible. And the skating done today is better than they could have hoped. As skaters use the equipment, adjust and experiment with it, they not only develop their own skating abilities, but force the equipment designers to keep improving their product. A skater who buys equipment from pretty pictures in a book sells himself and his ability short. The SOH catalog has never needed to print pictures of the products we sell because skaters who order from us are sophisticated enough to have tried out their friends' skates, read reports in the magazines and follow what works best for the top pros. The description, "a skater-owned company" is redundant - the whole industry is owned by skaters!
